

Piano Movers - Facts About Pianos and Reasons to Hire Professionals

Years ago, I made a terrible mistake. I hired an inadequate piano mover without any experience. My once beautiful piano accidentally became damaged due to the fact that the piano mover really didn't know what he was doing! My piano had so many memories associated with it. My parents had given it to me on my 16th birthday. We used to play duets together. My mom taught me quite well. Now, I blame myself that it is damaged. Don't let that happen to you. If you need to move your piano to your new home, it would definitely be a good idea that you hire the best piano movers in your area.. Read Facts about Piano Moving:

Facts About Pianos and Reasons to Hire Professionals:

1. Pianos are very heavy as well as awkward. They can actually weigh 1000 pounds or even more. Hire professionals who have the experience that's needed. When you try moving a piano yourself you not only risk your safety, but you also risk damaging your own piano. You risk injuring your back or even breaking some of your bones. You also run the absolute risk of ruining your piano by dropping it or destroying other items nearby such as walls or anything that just happen to get in the way. Therefore, you can view the extra cost of hiring piano movers as a justifiable and inexpensive way to prevent any drastic damages.
2. There is a reason people are willing to pay extra to hire piano movers. These items require special attention and care when moving. They are simply difficult to carry and try to maneuver, especially around hallways and staircases.

3. Professionals use certain types of equipment as well as techniques in order to get the job done properly. Many professionals use skids which are called piano boards, which are used specifically to transport pianos. Professional piano movers will wrap the piano in blankets and attempt to strap it to the board in order to further minimize damage. Piano boards are loaded on to dollies which enable the movers to transport the piano to the nearest exit.

4. Pianos are quite expensive and loved by many. They can cause a person to be sentimental and many times are irreplaceable. Whenever you need to move your piano, take every precaution so there won't be any damage done to it. Be very explicit to your movers about moving your piano.

5. Even if you are contemplating moving your piano to another room in your house, you should inquire about getting help from professional piano movers. Professionals know what they are doing. Never trust a friend or a relative to do the job.

6. Professional piano movers use tender loving care whenever they move this instrument. Their reputation is important to them and they strive to keep it.

7. The professionals totally understand the piano's structure, along with its functionality. Especially if the piano has been in the family for years, it would be heart wrenching to have it damaged.

8. Pianos are extremely heavy. Their weight is distributed equally throughout the case. Unless you hire a company who is properly trained along with the correct equipment with experience, accidents can happen.

9. Piano movers' charges vary depending upon the exact distance and of course, the amount of difficulty of the move. Be sure you get a list that's itemized correctly when moving more than just one piano.

Under "usual circumstances" the least costly type of move would be moving a piano from one room to another within your home or from the ground floor of a house to the ground floor of a nearby house.

Do you know a good piano mover? If not, do your homework online. Google piano movers or local movers in Pittsburgh or wherever you may live to find a reputable one near you.

Go with a company that has extensive experience in piano moving. Don't just hire anyone. Start googling and educate yourself on the subject of the importance of having an experienced piano mover. Ensure that you hire the company who has a good deal of experience. It is definitely worth your time in finding just the right one.
