

Refinishing kitchen cabinets gives them a whole new look

Refinishing kitchen cabinets is a cheaper and easier option to having them refaced. Refinishing your cabinets is a great option if they are starting to show signs of age but have not suffered any serious damage. Refinishing cabinets is a great way of updating your kitchen without spending a lot of money countertop refinishing.

Refinishing kitchen cabinets starts with taking them off their hinges. Although this is the most straightforward step, it can be difficult to complete the project if the cabinets are still attached.

You could inadvertently cause damage to other cabinets. It is also difficult to refinish the cabinets without letting the finish liquids drip and tarnish your floors or countertops.

Once you have taken down the doors, it is time for you to sand them. You can use sandpaper or a block to sand the doors, but it's easier to use a machine sander. To get the best results, sanding should only be done using fine-grit papers. However, if there are several layers of paint on your cabinets, you might need to use a higher grade. You should wear safety glasses and a mask when you sand this section. Wood chips can get in your eyes or mouth, which could be dangerous. It may take some time to remove the old finish.

The next step to refinishing kitchen cabinets after everything has been sanded is painting them. Depending on your preference, you can use either paint or a finisher. To ensure that there are no stains or damage to the paint before you apply it, if you're using paint. Oil-based paint is better than latex. They dry faster and are more comfortable to touch.

Once you've done everything above, and the cabinet doors have been hung back where they belong again, you can finally complete the refinishing. Although it's a bit more complicated than completely retaking them, it's definitely worth the effort. It can take a lot of time and effort to refinish cabinets. However, it is worth the effort. Although it can be more labor-intensive to give your kitchen a makeover, it is one of the most rewarding tasks.