GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY

Summer 2023 KI Fellowship Information Sheet

Internship Description

Each semester, KI recruits Georgetown students who are dedicated to social justice to work with local community groups in D.C. advocating for working people through its Organizing Internship and Research in Action Internship. Students will participate in an initial orientation the first week.

The Organizing Internship provides an opportunity for students to observe the impact of community and labor organizing, support and contribute to ongoing campaigns and projects, and develop their own organizing skills. Meanwhile, the Research in Action Internship provides students the opportunity to learn from leaders in the world of workers' rights, support and contribute to ongoing campaigns and research projects, and develop their own research skills.

The KI Summer Internship will:

- Introduce students to key issues affecting workers and the labor movement;
- Provide an experiential learning opportunity through the internship;
- Develop students' organizing skills through on the ground work with dynamic campaigns
- Support local community groups working towards worker justice;
- And maintain a strong connection between Georgetown and local communities.

Through first-hand involvement in local campaigns, students will develop their own view of the challenges facing workers in the modern economy and the role of worker justice. From these experiences, students contribute to the next generation of the worker justice movement.
