

The charts below show the results of a survey about what people of different age groups say makes them most happy.

Summarise the information by selecting and reporting the main features, and make comparisons where relevant.

What makes people most happy?

The pie charts indicate the results of the survey about what makes people happy by dividing people's age. In general, it seems both pie charts have some similarities and differences.

For both charts, the highest percentage of the factor that makes them happy was work achievements for under 30 and over 30 people, 31% and 32% respectively. Moreover, 22% of people who are under 30 said that when they're doing their hobbies, they feel most happy. It is clear to notice that almost the same amount of people (22%) who is over 30 say that they feel happiness from their leisure-time activities.

On the other hand, having a good appearance 18%, traveling (15%) and other factors (14%) are most important for people under thirty's happiness. In contrast, for people over 30, financial stability 20%, and being with family (14%) become the reasons of their happiness.

Overall, it is important to note that work and hobby are the most essential happiness source for any age people. However, being good-looking and traveling are the second crucial reason for young people. By comparison, for people who are over 30, financial security and family are significantly important factors in their happiness.

