Synopsis:

The main character's life is turned upside down when her best friend asks her an unusual question.

“Would you be my daughter's mom?”

Having lost his wife a few years prior, he has been taking care of his young child as a single dad. At this point he feels that his daughter truly needs a mother figure in her life, but he also knows that he'll never fall in love with another woman.

Thus the scenario arises. One which obviously anyone would have some questions about from the outside. But in the moment the main character felt as if there was only one right answer.

“Okay.”

Now the two friends end up in a strange situation of sharing a life and a child, but not a romantic relationship.

What type of complications will arise from this? There will surely be both strange and challenging ones. But also beautiful moments of genuine human connection and joy.
