I am Andrew, a person who always dreamed of being a wealthy man with all the mansions, beautiful women and supercars.

But one day at the age of 35 I realized that I don't have any of that yet and if I kept going on this path I would never make it to my dreams.

I thought by working a regular job I would be able to achieve all my dreams and live the life that I always wanted and dreamed of but as I grew up more and more I realized the harsh truth of it.

I want an honest answer for this question.

Are you proud of yourself?

Have you achieved what you want in this life?

Just think about it for a second.

Does working this shitty job that you always hated makes you satisfied?

Are you enjoying life when you are struggling to even pay the bills?

Do you think that you are a good man when you see your family's struggle and you on the other side refuse to act just because you are too lazy?

Better to answer yourself honestly because if it's not then the time has come my friend to become something greater than who you are.

This is your last chance to be what you always wanted to be.

You can be who you want to be now by making the right choice.

You either

Be ashamed of yourself forever.

Or

Be proud of yourself forever.

Your move.
