BACKGROUND

Background describes the state of the art in the subject and includes a suitable background, preceding research, and the significance of the study to demonstrate the scientific quality or novelty of the publication. Current issues and gaps are included in the background. Avoid using a literature review or a results summary.

OBJECTIVE

The main goal of the study is stated in the objective.

METHODS

Method includes research design, research location and time, population and samples, data measurement, and data analysis procedures. Please include sufficient details about the procedures used, including ethical behavior.

RESULTS

The primary findings of the study are described in the results. It should be clear and concise, and it should be able to be reported on text or images. Please offer some context for the data shown in tables or graphics.

DISCUSSION

The discussion should focus on the significance of the study's findings. The following topics should be discussed: What is the relationship between your findings and the original questions or objectives provided in the background section (how)? Do you provide scientific interpretation for each of your presented outcomes or findings (why)? Are your findings compatible with the findings of other researchers (what else)? Are there any distinctions?

CONCLUSION

The conclusion should address the study's objectives. Provide a clear scientific basis for your study, as well as any potential recommendations or implications for nursing education, practice, or research.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS (if any):

Acknowledge research funders and any research participants briefly.

REFERENCES

Use APA style for referencing sources. All the sources consulted while writing the articles are included in the reference. As many recent citations as you can, especially those from the current writing year, should be used. Unless they are essential to your study, remove older (greater than ten years old) literature citations. There must be a minimum of 15 citations, and at least 70% of these must come from scholarly works. Using secondary citations in references is discouraged. Please make use of the Mendeley, EndNote or Zotero Reference Manager Applications.
