Happ Faces Familiar Foe

Once upon a time, J.A. Happ was a third round draft pick by the Phillies and enjoyed the first three-plus years of his career (including a World Series title) in the city of brotherly love.

The 37-year-old has since faced his old squad five times, posting better results against them than against any other team in the majors.

Since 2010, Happ is 5-0 with a 1.45 ERA and 1.129 WHIP versus Philadelphia. That includes a win in 2018 with the Blue Jays, in which he tossed 6.2 innings and allowed only two earned runs.

None of those results are particularly recent, but it's a nice trend nonetheless.

Jake Arrieta was the most untouchable starting pitcher in 2015, riding a 22-6 record and 1.77 ERA to the NL Cy Young award. Since then, the 34-year-old has hit a noticeable decline.

83 seconds of Jake Arrieta being the Filthiest Pitcher on the Planet (no-hitter/2015). 🤔

His ERA totals in the years that followed have been 3.10, 3.53, 3.96 and 4.64. He has also led the NL in wild pitches twice in that span.

Clearly, he is not the pitcher he once was. Arrieta was trending particularly down in the latter half of last season, posting an 0-2 record with a 5.34 ERA in seven starts before his season ended in mid-August with a bone spur in his throwing elbow.

A handful of Yankees have never faced him, as you can see, but most of the ones who've faced him have done damage.

The Yankees have scratched out a pair of wins against a tough Nationals team, despite producing only nine runs in three games. Their team OPS of .639 is 19th in the majors. It is far too early to be concerned about those numbers, but it's still something to keep an eye on.

On the flip side of that coin, the Bronx Bombers are bound to break out at some point. Could that happen against Arrieta, who's been trending downward in recent years? Of course it could. Might be best to lean on the under in this matchup, given the Yankees' slow start, but New York is in prime position to win.

Pick: New York Yankees (-144)
