Abstract

The abstract serves both as a general introduction to the topic and as a brief summary of the main results and their implications. The abstract is written using Time New Roman font size 9, spaced one and provides an abstract of 150 to 250 words. For articles in Indonesian, include abstracts in Indonesian and English. Articles in Arabic include Arabic and English abstracts. Meanwhile, articles in English are only abstracts in English. The abstract should briefly describe the problem, aims, methods, results and conclusions.

Introduction

The introduction is the first part that states the intent and purpose of the work. A body and conclusion generally follow this. MJEMIAS does not enforce a strict layout as a standard, but all research papers contain the essential elements: introduction, methods, results, and discussion. Apart from the research report, the manuscript structure can be adjusted according to the required hierarchy.

Methods

The methods used in completing the research are listed in this section.

Results

The results contain research findings and must be supported by adequate data. The findings must be able to answer the research question or hypothesis in the introduction.

Discussion

Discussions should be short and focused. The use of discussion or conclusion in various fields is the same. Use one of these and can add a conclusion section.

Conclusion

Conclusions to restate the main findings against the hypothesis or research question, explain the relevance and added value of work, highlight any research limitations, and explain research directions and recommendations for the future. The use of discussion or conclusion in various fields is the same.

References

All references used must be listed in the reference list section. Writing a Reference List should use reference management tools (Mendeley, Zotero, EndNote). The writing format used in the MJEMIAS is the APA Style format, 7th edition (heading, subheading, table and numbering). Please re-read the author's guidelines.
