

A reviewer application will consist of four steps.

First, you will need to write up a résumé and submit it to our FimFiction Account. You can find a sample résumé here.

If your résumé is accepted, you will then be administered a reviewing test comprising a grammar section and a short answer section. The former will require you to correct a series of grammatical errors and grade on accuracy. The latter segment will include questions on techniques and concepts important in writing and editing and will be more generally graded.

Should you pass this test with a high enough score (a perfect score is not required), you will be given three stories to pass or fail as you see fit. The ultimate status of the story is not important; what matters is that you justify your decision with examples from the text while keeping to the principles exemplified in our Prereader's Omnibus. Reviews will be graded on the number of issues that the applicant is able to identify and explain in each given story. Points will be subtracted for incorrect or unhelpful reviews.

An applicant successful in all three steps will then be invited for a brief interview—preferably over Skype—during which they will be introduced to several members of the existing team. The purpose of this stage is not to evaluate your ability to “click” with the group, but rather to remove any final doubts to your qualifications.

The focus of this process is not on personality, history, or public image, but on merit and professionalism. If you are a capable person, we will be happy to take you. Note that if you are rejected, it is not meant as an insult to your worth as a person or writer: You are welcome to apply once more at a later date after polishing your reviewing and/or writing skills. You may also appeal your rejection should you feel it to be unfair.

If you have any questions, please direct them to TheNumber25, our Princess of Applications. He will be happy to help you out.
