I had only one week left to finish my month's work. That I had not even started yet

After being unemployed for two months, I finally got that job at an article-writing company, and the money was starting to look good too.

Now, all of that started flashing before my eyes.

Would I have to return to living in my car for weeks, or would I have to give up my career as a writer and return to living with my parents?

NO!

I plainly could not accept that! All my hard work to get here and my creativity merely vanished into thin air.

I was on writer's block the whole month, unable to write down even a single word that I wouldn't cross off a minute later.

Luckily, my birthday was a week before and my friend had gifted me something that was supposed to help with creativity.

With its help, I locked myself in my room for six days writing without stopping. I even had a day left to catch my breath.

His gift saved my skin by letting me get rid of my writer's block and even helped me gain multiple promotions until I was the top dog in the company.

Now I can't even imagine working without it, and I have my friend to thank for it.
