

Manticore vs Asian dragon

A manticore would definitely win a battle between an Asian dragon. A Manticore is a creature with a body of a lion, head of a human, teeth as a shark and a tail of venomous spines similar to Porcupine quills, while other people describe the tail as a Scorpion. Manticore's have enormous mouths with three sharp teeth. While on the other hand Asian dragons are informed as animal like creatures with the ability of: Human disguise. If they disguise as a human they might still get eaten because the Manticore is a man-eater and they still eat animals. They are described as a snake with four legs.

It is because Manticores shoot poisonous barbs out to paralyze or bring death to the victim.. Asian dragons are told to be lucky and good. If they are good how would they be able to win against a fierce and hazardous creature?

I say this because Asian dragons are not as powerful as Manticores. Therefore a Manticore is truly better with not only abilities but with advantage. A Manticore has a combined body with lots of fierce creatures which will give it lots of advantage in winning a battle.

A Manticore has a ability to demolish its victim. It's smart and leaves no trace behind, that is why everyone will be clueless to where it's victim is. They live in the bottom of the sea, lakes, and anything in nature that has water.

Therefore a Manticore would win a battle between an Asian dragon because of how fierce a Manticore can possibly be. An Asian dragon has a personality of a fierce creature, but it actually is weaker than a Manticore. Manticores have much more strengths that are better than Asian dragons.