A Short Backstory

Riggs had a rough childhood. His father had never really been present, and his mother had trouble keeping up with the little ball of energy that Riggs was. He needed constant entertainment, and she couldn't handle it. His mother loved him, but she would lash out from time to time. In her defense, Riggs was a huge pain in the ass, constantly crying and throwing fits until he learned to control himself. She never laid a hand on him, though.

Once he was old enough, Riggs began playing baseball. It was an intense sport and a good outlet for everything he kept bottled up. Riggs could never learn to properly let his emotions out once he'd grown out of temper tantrums. If somebody had upset him, he would brush it up like it was nothing, even if it was taking a severe toll on him. Baseball helped to reduce that toll just slightly.

For the times Riggs' father had been present, he was no help. He nagged Riggs' mother, forcing her to do chores and buy him things. One day, when he was being particularly horrid, he lashed out at Riggs for defending his mother. One thing led to another, and his father ended up twitching on the floor, blood pouring from his head, while Riggs was holding a bloody bat. That man was buried in a spot nobody would ever find him.

The secret of his fathers' unconventional death was something both Riggs and his mother would be taking to the grave.

Other Details

- Riggs' mother often fears the anger he has festering within him. He was never one to lash out at people, dismissing the mistakes and betrayals of others with a short, "It's okay." He never told the truth when he dismissed those people.

- Riggs hates his first name. He hates how it sounds, and hates the nicknames people used to come up with. So, he goes by Riggs. Nobody really knows where the name came from, and many of his friends are unaware that 'Riggs' isn't his first name.
- His clothes usually consist of old ragged shirts, baggy jeans, and boots. He always has a black jacket on. Although he's not big on jewelry, he always wears a silver necklace. Encased in a charm is a dark blue gem. It was gifted to him by his mother.
- When he was thirteen or fourteen, Riggs and his friends decided to pierce their ears and give themselves stick-and-pokes. He only ended up piercing one ear, a tiger tooth earring always hanging from it. He has three stick-and-pokes. Two are flowers, located on his back, and one is a skull, located on his hip.
- Riggs is interested in both men and women.
- After his father's death, Riggs had continuous nightmares about it. His baseball career began struggling, just the sight of his bat reminding him of what he'd done.
- One of Riggs' best friends is Chris. Despite their differences, Chris just understands Riggs on a deeper level.
- At one point, Riggs had a brief thing for Sam. He never talks about it due to the embarrassment he feels.

- Riggs, for whatever reason, is easier to agitate when he's around Mike. He doesn't know what it is, but everything Mike does gives Riggs a headache. The same goes for Jessica.
- Other than the obvious trauma fears he's developed, Riggs fears little to nothing. The only thing that really bothers him is the unknown. Not knowing of every danger in the world bothers him.
- Despite playing baseball, Riggs is rather slim. He's got some muscle, but nothing too over the top.
- Riggs is laid back until something really ticks him off. He's good at keeping his composure in stressful situations, but if he's under a lot of stress prior to the situation, he gets snappier and doesn't talk as much.
- One thing that Riggs is good at is helping to lighten up a mood. But, his methods can always go south, and it can ruin a mood even more.
- Riggs has a few small scars littered along his body, but the most prominent one is a bullet wound on his left shoulder. He'd gotten it after his friend shot him with a .45 caliber handgun. Needless to say, Riggs hasn't spoken to that friend in years.
