If Any of This Feels Familiar...

You're Not Sure What to Focus On

You're working hard, but you're not always sure what actually matters.

You're unclear on what quality looks like at your level. You're unsure what should come next.

This leads to:

- Overwhelm
- Scattered training
- Practicing things that don't move the needle
- Uncertainty about readiness

You're Not Sure How to Build Skills or Fix Problems

When something feels off, it's not always clear:

- Is it balance?
- Is it tension?
- Is it understanding?
- Is it timing?

You hesitate. You second-guess. You worry about fixing the wrong thing.

You Struggle to Make Steady Progress

You improve... then plateau.

You gain clarity... then drift.

Without structure and accountability, progress feels inconsistent and unpredictable.

If you've felt this, you're not lacking effort.

You need:

- Clear standards
 - Better decision-making tools
 - A structured system for steady progression

The 3 Shifts That Change Everything

Inside the Working Equitation Success Track™, three things begin to shift at the same time:

1. You Learn What to Focus On

- Clarity replaces guesswork.
 - You understand what quality actually means. Not just completion, but correctness.

2. You Learn How to Build Skills and Fix Problems

- You develop judgment.
 - You learn how to observe, interpret, and respond without emotional overcorrection.

3. You Begin Making Steady, Intentional Progress

- Your training follows a clear rhythm.
- Instead of random effort, you build cumulative development.

These three elements reinforce one another creating confident, prepared performance by design.

Why I Care About This Work

For years, I worked as a problem-solving trainer.

I saw what happens when steps are skipped. When riders are trying hard but don't fully understand what they're building. When horses are labeled "difficult" simply because the training wasn't broken down clearly enough.

What I learned is this:

Both horses and riders need skills broken into far more steps than most programs teach.

I'm naturally analytical. Developing feel didn't come quickly to me because it wasn't explained clearly. So I spent years breaking things down: what I was seeing, what I was feeling, what I was doing, and how the horse was responding.

At the same time, I was retraining horses with problems. Many of which could have been prevented with clearer progression from the beginning.

Working Equitation is the perfect discipline for learning to train your own horse. It requires precision, balance, and thoughtful development.

But many riders don't have access to coaching that truly breaks things down.

And when steps are skipped, both horse and rider get frustrated.

That's why I built this program.

So you don't have to send your horse away to a trainer.

So you don't have to guess.

So you can confidently become your horse's trainer.

The Foundation: Working Equitation Mastery

At the core of everything is the complete Working Equitation Mastery curriculum.

This is a structured, in-depth training system designed to clarify standards and systematically develop the skills required in Working Equitation.

Inside, you gain access to:

Comprehensive Obstacle Breakdowns

Each obstacle is explored beyond “how to complete it.”

You learn:

- Its purpose
 - What judges are actually evaluating
 - The qualities required for higher scores
 - Common rider mistakes
 - How to train it progressively
 - How it connects back to foundational flatwork

Standards & Scoring Clarity

You'll understand:

- What quality truly looks like
 - The difference between completion and correctness
 - How standards evolve through levels
 - What separates average from polished performance

Skill Progression Guidance

Instead of isolated tips, you see how:

- Skills layer logically

- Groundwork, flatwork, and obstacles integrate
- Strength, balance, and clarity build over time

This curriculum becomes your long-term reference system.

But information alone doesn't create progress.

That's where the Success Track comes in.

Frequently Asked Questions

What level of rider is this appropriate for?

The Success Track is designed for riders interested in Working Equitation who want clarity around standards, progression, and skill development.

Riders at different stages can participate, as the focus is on understanding what quality looks like and building systematically from where you are.

Do I need to be competing?

No. You do not need to be showing.

The program supports riders preparing for clinics, shows, or simply wanting structured development at home.

What if I can't attend the live Q&A sessions?

All live sessions are recorded and available for replay.

You may also submit questions in advance if you're unable to attend live.

How much time should I expect to commit each week?

You should plan for consistent riding and engagement with the curriculum.

The program is designed to integrate into your normal training routine rather than add overwhelming volume.

What happens after the 4 months end?

You retain lifetime access to the full Working Equitation Mastery curriculum.

The structured coaching portion concludes after 4 months, but the educational material remains available as a long-term reference.

Your Next Step

You don't need more scattered pieces.

You need clarity about what matters.

You need better decision-making tools.

You need steady, structured progress.

That's what the Working Equitation Success Track™ is designed to provide.

Enrollment is limited to 20 riders. We begin May 15th.

If you're ready to train with clarity and build steady momentum over the next four months,
