Venus, as she describes herself, is "out of this world," in one way or another.

The woman adopts an elegant persona. Each and every breath and step she takes is calculated, exuding grace. While she comes from humble roots, Venus tries her best to fashion herself with as much luxury as she's able to manage. After all, a lady must always look her finest. Her aesthetic contributes to her personality and charisma. Her flowery vocabulary and poise fits her occupation, assisting the allure of otherworldly imaginative services such as fortune telling and spiritual healing. Venus is an insightful person, able to read others at a simple glance. It's a skill that she's garnered over the course of her career, one she's very proud of. As someone working within a field some would be skeptical of, Venus is an open-minded person, and is welcome to any sort of change that comes in her life.

While Venus's personality may entice some, others may find her a bit unnerving. Her whimsicality can be annoying to some, as folks who find themselves grounded in reality will butt heads with Venus, whose head is stuck in the clouds. Venus is peaceful, not wanting to pick fights or argue. She finds those sorts of things unnecessary. However, this comes to a radical extent. Her pacifist nature prevents her from picking sides in fights, and while she's fine with fighting for herself, it's a rare sight to see her fighting for other people. Really, petty squabbles are above her. In fact, when she's not in immediate danger, she's imperturbable, keeping her poise even when under stress. Venus doesn't really care what comes next-- knowing that she'll be able to deal with it, one way or another.

However, even self-proclaimed "goddesses" have their issues. In fact, she's quite patronizing. While she tries to keep a polite facade, she truly does believe that she is superior above all others. On the other hand, Venus is incredibly interested in other people, however, she doesn't truly see them as her peers, rather than a means of entertainment. While among peers and people she is familiar with, Venus is known to pry into people's lives, always asking questions and getting into others' business. She wants to get to know others, especially about secrets. However, when it comes to things other than gossip, she feels quite apathetic toward others. Rather than being upfront about her two-faced personality, Venus remains mendacious, hiding her true thoughts behind a smile and ornate words, and if she doesn't lie, she remains cryptic when being asked about her true feelings and nature, dodging questions and avoiding discussions as Venus believes is necessary.

Public Information ::

A notorious conwoman, known by many different names throughout the years. Having come from a distant land years ago, she claims to have come to New Bailey searching for a new life. However, her actions over the past years make many doubt her claims.

Although her name, appearance, and supposed occupation have changed, her charisma and ability to pull people in have remained. At one point, a merchant of exotic goods, and at another point, a street mechanic that would fix imaginary problems in her client's motorcars. Since her arrival in New Bailey, despite her notoriety, she has been able to slip out of the law's grip, both due to her intelligence and her ability to escape imminent danger.

Around two years ago, the conwoman had finally met her match— as she had finally been convicted of the many misdemeanors she had accrued over her time in New Bailey. Caught in the middle of her newest scheme, a fortune-telling parlor, she was sent away to prison under the court of law.

Having only been released this year due to good behavior, now going by the name Madame Venus Chantea, she has recently fallen into favor with the Rookie Law Program, who she turned to in her time of need. Although some doubt her sincerity, the Madame preaches, supposedly from the bottom of her heart, that she wishes to turn a new leaf.
