First mention of elegiac compasses, provided with map, five remain.

Plus:

Nakht Shepses suspects that a cult of atheist lamias called the Amushet might be behind the undead uprising, no doubt agitated by the church's ill-advised exploration program. According to Nakht, the lamias know bizarre magics and have been known to take paramours from the city's populace, releasing them only after blinding them and driving them insane. The Amushet inhabit the Cenotaph of the Cynic in the necropolis, treating it as their personal playground. In his investigations of Wati's grave-robbing gangs, Ptemenib regularly visits the necropolis, and has made contact with a clan of dark folk called the Xotl who dwell beneath Vizier's Hill. Ptemenib suggests that the party seek out the Xotl leader, named Unwrapped Harmony, in the old villa of the Asetiti family, and sketches you a quick map showing the villa's location. Among the less dangerous of the necropolis's denizens, the dark folk are tolerated by the church, and Ptemenib believes they could have information about the outbreak of undeath in the city.

Teos post (referencing an image?)

Four of those compass locations don't show up on the map: Ghoul Market, Observatory of Truth and Wisdom, Pyramid of Arithmetic Bliss, Temple of the Risen Osiris.

Two do: Archives of the Ibis, Dust Parlor.

Harmony's shared intelligence:

A man, human, not dwarf, in a gold mask was seen by one of my men near the Marid's Caress. He was carrying a golden mask and was toying with a brass cage. My man says he saw the man arguing with the cage.

According to Sebti's map, one of the Pharasmins' elegiac compasses was placed in the ruins of this unassuming middle-class bathhouse called the Marid's Caress. After centuries of neglect, however, the bathhouse's plumbing finally failed, collapsing one wall onto the compass and damaging it beyond repair.

Masked cultist with journal!

Searching the corpse reveals only the cultist's equipment and his personal notebook, which details the names and locations of the sites he was sent to investigate for signs of the Mask of the Forgotten Pharaoh.

The locations are:

- * the Marid's Caress (crossed out by cultist)
- * the Observatory of Truth and Wisdom
- * the Pyramid of Arithmetic Bliss (we are here!)
- * the Sanctum of the Erudite Eye (crossed out by cultist)
- * the Shiny Bauble (visited by Da' Dwarves!)
- * and the tomb of Menket Maatya
