

Sonya Betz

Sonya Betz is the Head, Open Publishing and Digitization Services at the University of Alberta in Edmonton, Canada, which supports more than 60 diamond Open Access journals through its non-commercial, scholar-led publishing program. Sonya has worked in academic libraries for more than 15 years and is deeply interested in seeking ways to promote and sustain not-for-profit approaches to scholarly publishing and open access. She has served with the Library Publishing Coalition in a number of roles, including as a member and Chair of the Program Committee, as a partner on the Library Publishing Workflows Project, and as the current chair of the Canadian Community Development Working Group. She's also a member of the Public Knowledge Project's Technical Committee, the Coalition for Canadian Digital Heritage, and the Advisory Board of the Irish Open Access Publishers.

Jeanette Hatherill

Jeanette Hatherill is a Strategic Community Engagement Consultant with Coalition Publica, which supports sustainable open access by developing a non-commercial, open source national infrastructure for digital scholarly publishing, dissemination, and research. Prior to her work with Coalition Publica, she worked for 10 years at the University of Ottawa Library in Ottawa, Canada, as a scholarly communication librarian supporting open access initiatives, including the library's journal publishing services, the institutional repository, and managing the University's financial support for open access.

ABSTRACT: Communities are infrastructure: Supporting Canada's library publishers

In October 2022, the Library Publishing Coalition struck a Canadian Community Development Working Group (CCDWG). Initiated by Canadian LPC members, the working group was tasked to engage Canadian scholarly communications stakeholders to explore strategies for developing a stronger Canadian library publisher community. Érudit and the Public Knowledge Project have a long history of supporting libraries and publishing in Canada and have very much shaped the current landscape of independent scholarly publishing in the national context. Together as Coalition Publica they support the social sciences and humanities journal community by developing and coordinating an open and sustainable national infrastructure. Library publishers are an important piece of this national infrastructure.

This session will shed light on how Coalition Publica and the LPC Canadian Community Development Working Group are tackling community development work in Canada to support sustainable open access publishing in a bilingual context. The presenters will highlight the needs and priorities of the library publishing community and demonstrate how multiple stakeholders can work together to achieve common goals.