Subject	The dying Millionaire

Hey Abduljalil,

I remember one of our first clients when we started this freelancing course in 2022.

He was a charming young man and had called to enquire about the whole program and how it would benefit him.

Deep into the conversation, he asks me if there is actually any point in him chasing money.

I was really confused at that question but carried on the conversation like nothing happened.

He also asked me chances of success, would he surmount to anything? Is it worth it?

At this point I was really confused and I asked him why he was having doubts.

He said "Well you see I have grade 3 cancer and I am likely to die in a few months. I had just decided to try new things when I stumbled upon your ad for freelancing."

My heart felt like a heavy burden on my chest and my eyes were teary, I felt really sad for him and deep down I was scared if I could actually help him achieve his purpose before his time expired.

After such an emotional conversation, I assured him that his last days would be his best and though he seemed to agree with me, he answered me with a very low tone of voice as if he wasn't really convinced with what I said.

Now at the start of this course, I had made sure to check on him once in a while to see how he was doing.

Two weeks into the learning process, I spoke with him and I had never seen a man so happy and lively in my life.

I asked him why he was so happy and he told me that he now understands what has been the problem in his life till now.

Still confused and yet curious, I asked him what it was.

And he graciously with a very happy tone in his voice said: "I never had a purpose, I never tried to achieve anything. I always believed everything was gonna fail for me. I really wished I felt this earlier in my life."

Three more months after our conversation, He was planning a world tour to go on with his brother and had just earned his first 500 grand. I was sincerely filled with soo much pride and joy that I cried when he told me this.

Unfortunately, he died two days after his tour. What a way to die. The best way, filled with pride of achievement and self actualization.

Now the major lesson from this story is that this man had the best gift man could ever hope for; A sense of urgency, the feeling that he was on borrowed time.

Humans don't really ever think about their mortality. We forget that we are not immortals until we get to our old age or we are phased with a terminal illness.

Meditate on our common mortality everyday. If you were going to die in 3 months, what would you have done differently? Develop a maniacal sense of urgency and see how your life improves with lightning speed.

Subject	The odds of you being successful are....

Hey Abduljalil,

What are the odds of making your dreams come true?

Is it having enough capital for a business?

Is it being born in a rich family?

Are you doing anything productive? How much time have you wasted?

The truth about success is that you can NEVER achieve something meaningful in your life without belief and actually doing the work. And i think that's self explanatory enough to know your odds.

So buckle up and get ready for the ups and downs of Success. Lets gooooo!!

Subject	Wanna know why nothing has changed in your Life?

If you are asking yourself this question, you damn well know the answer.

You work hard but you just don't work hard enough and you know it deep down.

You are a slave to laziness and it seems in that world being a slave is more comfortable than being the master.

You waste time and energy on unnecessary things that seem important but are not.

The good thing about success though is that all those unnecessary "important" things will come anyways when you start to win.(i.e the girls, friends, validation and all).

So would you get up and stop wasting your energy and time on chasing those things and change your life. All those things would chase you.

Stop wasting your money on things that wouldn't make you a better person, that's disrespecting yourself.

P.S. Buy our freelancing course and finally use your money for self-improvement and make more money for yourself.
