Ad 1: The #1 Misconception about bunker shots

There is a HUGE misconception about bunker shots that stops golfers from levelling up their game.

The idea in question?

Is that making successful bunker shots all relies on your swing

When, in fact...

How you strike the ball does NOTHING to improve your chances of getting out of the bunker

Nor has it anything to do with the quality of the sand.

Changing your approach to bunker shots will make you clear them faster every time

And can even decrease your handicap below par,

Not to mention unlimited bragging rights over your mates

Ad 2: The biggest flaw most golfers have when attempting bunker shots (Spoiler, it's not the sand)

99% of amateur golfers are set in their ways when it comes to bunker shots

They' all think that striking the ball harder will get them out of the bunker

But in reality...

Striking the ball harder is causing these problems in the first place

This is because in the bunker, your swing affects the club dragging in the sand

So if you go for a large, or small swing, all you're gonna be sending skyward is sand

In fact, the quality of the sand doesn't even determine whether you're getting out of the bunker at all.
