Power Battitude
Vivienne is able to transform into a bat at any given time. By doing that though, she loses her sense of sight and is forced to rely on echolocation. This ability is used to get her to places she can't reach, or as a maneuver to escape danger.

Power Bow To The Queen
Vivienne is able to make any living creature obey her if she can break through their mind. This is a very powerful power, and seeing as she's still in her vampire training, Vivienne isn't very skilled at it yet. She can easily control rats and other smaller creatures, but it takes her a lot of strength and will to control a monster or human. It is extremely draining of her power and makes her very tired, resulting in terrible headaches that can last for days up to a week.

Power Up the wall we go
Vampires profit from the ability to scale walls like spiders or lizards. This power requires a lot of concentration from Vivienne's side, else she will simply fall and land on her behind. Vivienne refrains from using this newfound ability much, mainly because it's a freaky sight to see someone walk up a wall. However, it can be quite useful when she wants to have some peace and quiet by hanging from the ceiling. Spending too much time doing so however will leave her very disoriented and make her legs feel wobbly.

Flaw Burning Skin
Like any other vampire, Vivienne is extremely sensitive to sunlight. Being exposed to it can lead to her skin burning and smoking, and can be extremely painful. Skin that was exposed to sunlight takes a long time to heal and regenerate, and looks closely to a bad sunburn.

Personality

Upon first meeting Vivienne, the vampire appears rather intimidating and stand-offish, possessing a cold nature that will make most people her age turn away from her. However, the young woman is generally well-liked by teachers and staff due to her intellect and being rather mature compared to most students. She's quite polite and obeying of rules and orders, wanting to show herself from her good side whenever possible.

Vivienne likes to take initiative in events and speak up about things she doesn't feel like are right. She holds her ground well in arguments, partly because her sheer appearance tends to intimidate other monsters enough to avoid arguing with her. The vampire is very stubborn and won't back down from something until she gets her point across. She hates being wrong, especially being proven wrong, and trying to change her mind hardly ever works.

She prefers to be the person in charge in order to assert her dominance. Anyone vulgar or dirty gets her on her nerves. She can't stand anyone who tries to stand up to her, challenge her, or attempt to bring her down. While she seems to be calm most of the time, Vivienne tends to lose her temper quite quickly. This makes her unable to react the way she would usually do, by trying to find weak points in her opponent and point them out. She's a very sore loser and hates having people catch her off-guard.

Thus, Vivienne can be tough to befriend, especially because she doesn't trust easily and picks out her friends like lucky clover leaves. If you do happen to make her like you however, she will show you a side of hers that not many get to see, and can actually be quite a great and loyal friend.

History

Warnings: None

The Beaumonts lived in an old castle in the Swiss Romandy for generations. However, with Vivienne's grandfather being a rather curious fellow who wanted to explore the world, the family moved to the Americas with the thirst for new opportunities and, well, blood.

After a childhood of travelling around the continent, Lucien Beaumont met a charming, fellow vampire by the name of Fatima. Together, the two went on numerous raids on human settlements, feeding on the blood of unknowing men and women. It was like that for quite a while, and despite their rather intimate and loving relationship, both of them took a lot of time before deciding to get married and starting a family in quiet Hound Holde Hollow.

Vivienne was their only daughter, a beautiful vampire with sharp teeth and dark brown hair, and a face paler than snow. The perfect offspring of two proud vampires, so to say. They raised her in a small house near the mountain area, teaching her everything about vampire culture and history in hopes of making her a worthy heir of their family.

The girl lost interest in those things quickly after going to kindergarten. Her parents knew that things have changed throughout the centuries they've been alive for, and thus wanted to give their daughter the chance to find her own way. After all, she's their daughter, and they knew that she'd make them proud.

And she did, despite the dyslexia she was diagnosed with in second grade. Vivienne was quite the smart girl, studying hard and bringing home good grades. Her parents were quite amazed by her, bragging about their smart daughter to their fellow vampire friends.

She didn't mind being the center of attention at school, actually quite enjoying the praise she'd get from teachers, adults, and fellow students. Still, Vivienne preferred to be on her own, unsure whom she could trust enough to be her friend due to not wanting her status to be the main reason they'd want to befriend her. Of course there were the occasional bullies or kids that tried to mock her, but Vivienne would always outsmart them and make them look bad instead. Eventually, she started to give the bullies that would annoy innocent students in the hallway or during lunch a piece of her own mind, making friends with their targets instead of the popular kids.

As she grew older, this stayed quite the same, however Vivienne was more open to the idea of getting more friends. She even befriended some of the popular kids, had the typical "kindergarten" relationship with some boys for a few days before breaking their hearts. But students looked up to her, were amazed by her and wanted to be just like her.

High School isn't any different. With her selected group of friends, Vivienne Beaumont makes sure everyone in Fright High knows her name as the Queen Bee of the school.
