

Why Should You Start Your Own Company?

Bootstrapping is a bold, autonomous path in a society obsessed on fast scaling and venture money. More crucial than money by itself is freedom, autonomy, and producing something on your own terms. Starting a business with your own money, savings, and tenacity—bootstrapping—is known as Resilience, creativity, and resourcefulness all ultimately define it. Instead of looking for investors, you focus on giving your customers actual value.

This is not a weak of heart approach. It exhorts self-control, selflessness, and a clear objective. The advantages, though, are great: total control over your company, the ability to make decisions in line with your values, and the gratification that results from working from the ground up.

We lean toward the bootstrapping perspective. We advocate providing tools to business owners so they may take control of their financial future and build businesses consistent with their values and passions. Bootstrapping is a way of thinking about empowerment and self-reliance rather than only a means of funding.
