Come for the art. | Stay for the stories.
Leave carrying a little piece of the healing.

This fall, I invite you to experience the Mercy Healing Fall Open Studio, a season of art, storytelling, making, and community rooted in the historic Mercy Hospital building in East Wilson, where I was born. I use the term medicine cloth to describe the relationship between plants, making, memory, comfort, and cultural storytelling, not to suggest that wearing it provides medicinal properties.

From October 1 through December 21, 2026, Room 104 in the historic Mercy Hospital Building becomes more than a place to see and purchase art. It transforms into a gathering place to share the lessons I carried from my childhood on Daniel Hill and in East Wilson: lessons learned from my mother, grandmothers, godmother, and other ancestors who taught me to make something beautiful and useful with our hands.

The experience extends beyond the walls of Mercy Hospital to Cavvieta Quarter Horse & Cattle Co. for a Cowboy Christmas. Throughout the fall season, I'll take the work into the community through demonstrations, workshops, special events, and opportunities to gather around cloth, color, stitching, and story at Y-GIG After School and Wilson Botanical Gardens.

Visitors to the Mercy Healing Studio will discover naturally dyed wearables and home goods, one-of-a-kind fiber art, hand stitching, quilting, embellishment, and other works inspired by the traditions and everyday creativity that shaped me. But this is not simply a show where you stand back and look.

You are invited to be a maker.

Throughout the open studio season, I'll offer free demonstrations, low-cost Make & Take projects, and reduced-fee hands-on workshops where visitors can experience some of the techniques, materials, and stories behind the work.

Come hear the stories.

Touch the cloth.

Watch my hands work.

Put something in your own hands and make.

The Mercy Healing Fall Studio Show & Tour is about remembering that creativity can travel, from one generation to another, from one neighborhood to another, from one pair of hands to the next.
