

“Local” Therapist Decapitates Vampire

“I am Soo Rin Kim Gujurat.” – Soo Rin Kim Gujurat

Today, in this lovely issue of The Tringle Gazelle, we shall recount for you a lovely tale that took place just a “teensy bit” of time ago, and that concerned everyone’s favorite bloodthirsty creep: Edward “Thirsty Glitter Man” Cullen. During this event, an (at the time) future therapist was alone in their not-so-bright house when they saw the figure of a strange, unidentified man staring at them. Doing what any sane person would do, they punched the UFO (ugly, fear-inducing object) in the face. Unexpectedly, the target’s head was thoroughly removed from its body, and lay back onto its neck, clearly displaying that it no longer had a functioning spine.

After turning on a light, the culprit discovered that the strange man was actually a cardboard cutout of Thirsty Glitter Man that they had entirely forgotten was owned by their sister, which would explain why its head fell off so easily, and why it didn’t make a tasty crunching sound while doing so. While this decapitation-based ~~success for humanity~~ “crime” was very much a good thing, it became problematic for the future therapist in question, as they knew that the owner of the cardboard replica of the frightfully frightful creature would not be incredibly joyful with their actions, as, of course, said owner was hoping to decapitate it herself.

In an attempt to evade that un-joyfulness, the decapitator collected some tape and corrected the decapitatee’s hideously gorgeous neck posture, placing it right near the front door, where they knew that the next person who entered the house would punch it as well. They were correct, and it was a most successful framing. Due to this action, the official records of Thirsty Glitter Man’s murder had said that it was done by the person who was framed, leading to a trial that remained inconclusive, as the judge’s head was also punched off. Obviously this information is false, which means that (once again), The Tringle Gazelle is the only reliable source on this topic.

Soo Rin Kim Gujurat Sings a Very Bad New Year’s Song

Just before the huge round object was sent tumbling towards the floor between the days of December 301, 2022 and January 1.87, 2023, an up-and-coming singer by the name of Soo Rin Kim Gujurat sang a bad song. This song was supposedly sung by people every year, but that’s not what was important about the event. The important part is that the words of the song were changed this year, making it actually good. This was definitely a legitimate change in the song’s lyrics, and totally not incorrect subtitles. These new lyrics were full of incredibly communicative gibberish that had a lot of meaning, such as the lyric “I am Soo Rin Kim Gujurat”, when Soo Rin Kim Gujurat gave us her name. Needless to say, we all know that this new and improved New Year’s song will be performed for years to come, due to the incredible lyric-writing of Soo Rin Kim Gujurat.
