Businesses can greatly benefit from Network Management Systems especially those that use a broad range of functions. Below are some of the main aspects of Network Management:

Network Operation

The biggest challenge with today's network management solutions is to proactively identify faults before it impacts end-users. Network Operation involves smooth network functioning as designed and intended, including close monitoring of activities to quickly and efficiently address and fix problems as they occur and preferably even before users are aware of the problem.

Network Maintenance

Network Maintenance seeks to provide timely repair and necessary upgrades to all network resources such as switches, routers and damaged transmission lines. It also secures preventive and corrective measures by means of close communication and collaboration with network administrators.

Network Provisioning

This involves calculating the load needed by the network, as well as future demands, based on the current network trend. This also keeps the resources and particular services like voice capabilities or increasing broadband requirements.
