

• Each One Care for One

"[Christians] have an obligation, whatever they do, to live with love and joy among themselves. The one working should say for the one praying: 'The treasure my brother acquires through prayer is also mine, because it is a common treasure.' And the one praying should say for the one reading: 'Whatever benefit he derives from reading becomes my gain also.' And the one working should say: 'The service I render is for the common good...' Neither should the one praying judge the one working for not praying, nor should the one working judge the one praying for being idle while I am working; nor again should anyone providing a service judge the others. Rather, everyone should do what they do for the glory of God... One thing is needful, for each person to have the treasure in his soul and life that is Christ present always in his mind. While working or praying or studying, one must have that possession that is not lost – the Holy Spirit." ---St. Makarios of Egypt
