

Advertising Rules OCT 15

- You cannot advertise on a subreddit with over 10,000 subscribers.
 - If a member of the party puts an advertisement on a subreddit with more than 10,000 subscribers their vote will be discarded and they will be banned from /r/MHoC for 1 day. If the advert is not removed within 30 minutes of it being brought to any member of the speakerships attention, then 50% of the votes for that party, during the time the advert was up, will be randomly discarded.
 - If a dupe account breaks the rule then the account will be investigated by the reddit admins for breaking subreddit rules which could potentially lead to a ban for all accounts the person has.
- Do not send exceedingly large quantities of PMs out to members of reddit - use your judgement for what an exceedingly large amount is. I have messaged the admins and they are aware of what is going on and are ok with PMs being sent to a certain extent; do not abuse their trust because the sub as a whole could be punished..
- All PMs you send out should have the following message attached (all text in red):

This is a PM sent on behalf of a member of /r/MHOC for the general election that occurs every 6 months. If you want to opt out from receiving PMs from MHOC members, during election periods, then please fill out the following form:
<http://goo.gl/forms/lqg8RU81X0>

Thank you.

- You may use alternative accounts to send PMs but you must notify the Speakership team of the alternative account being used and the user who will be sending the PMs - so we can keep track and avoid incorrect shadow bans.

- When you make an advertisement on a subreddit you may introduce/sign off the post with the following:

“I’m the [party name/indi grouping name/ ideology] prospective parliamentary candidate for [location standing]. or similar versions

- You can link to the main GE sticky post where a visible link to the sheet containing a list of all candidates and where they are standing will be.
- You can mention where you are standing but you cannot tell people to vote in any specific constituency.
- If you tell people to vote in a specific constituency, in an advert, then your vote will be discarded and you will be banned for 5 days from /r/MHOC and your party will lose 50% of votes (in the constituency directed at) during the time period the advert was up - unless it is removed within 30 minutes of a member of the Speakership team requesting it be taken down. If it is removed then your vote will still be discarded and you will still face a 5 day ban.
- I will be sending out random PMs to people who have voting asking them if they were told to vote in a specific constituency - I will check every party and every indi grouping. If you are found - with proof - to be breaking the rules via PM then your vote will be discarded and you will be banned for 5 days.
- If the speakership feel you are taking advantage - such as using technical loopholes that we might not be aware of - of the rules then we can hand out a punishment we deem suitable.
- Should you comment on each other's advertisements, you should remain civil at all times, you should not use their real names, libel should be avoided and irrelevant (Skype) screenshots/quotes should not be used. We want to attract new members to the subreddit so if they see petty bickering and personal attacks in the comments it will paint us in a poor light.

- The other rules mentioned on the various GE posts apply, such as the rules for external websites and twitter/facebook. If these rules are broken then the Speakership will hand out punishments similar in vein to those listed above.
