My Goals Achieved

- Finally hit the 30k a month

After the painful loss of the real world, I had decided giving up is not an option.

I had given myself and everyone else a promise and I ought to keep that promise.

I continued to practice what The Real World had taught me and With delays and a lot of learning by failure through clients, I finally hit the 30k a month goal.

I decided to become like Bruce Wayne. And by Becoming Bruce Wayne, I mean that I have to become a detective. A copywriting detective.

But I can't become Batman without also becoming the best version of myself both physically and mentally.

My Rewards Earned

The sun is scorching hot as I sit on the powdery beach, listening to the sea waves crashing on the beach.

As I lay there on the beach looking up into the sky, I could say one thing for certain: Giving my family this experience was definitely worth the struggle.

Months of stress and pain both physically and mentally finally paid off and I was finally able to take my wife and son on a vacation to somewhere tropical.

Although I cant take breaks from work, I can enjoy the beautiful beaches, the green palm trees and most important freedom.

I can now be the man who provides for his family, but the biggest reward is not being able to travel the world or having fast cars.

The biggest reward is to get proud of what I could do for those around me.

My Appearance And How Others Perceive Him

- Walking around with a fresh haircut, a strong body armored with a good suit, I am now oozing with confidence and ready for any challenge.

My wife perceives me as the greatest man in the world and my son perceives me as the greatest dad in the world.

I am now speaking clearly and concisely. No more “Uhm” “ eeheh”, or “I dont know”.
