Terry Fox was a Canadian distance runner who was diagnosed with bone cancer at 18 years old, therefore his right leg had to be amputated. However, he didn't let this stop him from doing what he loves. He courageously set out to run from the western point of Canada to the east in pursuit of raising awareness to cancer research. He did this under the name, "Marathon of Hope". Unfortunately, Fox's cancer had appeared in his lungs and he passed away soon after. Though he never completed the run, thousands join together annually to run and carry his legacy while continuing in raising awareness to cancer, donating to cancer research, and bringing hope to millions. To continue his legacy we want to invite you to join us in our own "Hope Run". Continue reading to find out more about where the proceeds of this race will be going towards.
