

Overall strategy: Start by getting an overall sense of how to do email research. To do so, read this article, then read this article, then this article, then this article, then this article, then this article. Try to look for professional email address. A work email will be something like @[professional domain].com. Make sure to verify the accuracy of an email using <https://verify-email.org/>

If these fail, try out some of the other strategies described in the articles above.

Sometimes, you will find several email options. Just send emails to each with the pitch, and see if it bounces. If it does not bounce in 2 minutes, it's likely the right email. If you send it to all the emails and it's the wrong email, then try to use the contact form on a website. It's really best to not use the contact form if possible, as it does not permit links.
