Hard Hitting Statistics	By trying a bit harder in my statistics and getting more information.	I have included rhetorical questions, facts and hard hitting statistics in the introduction of my writing.
Damage Caused		I have used negative intent in my sentences to appeal to the emotions of the audience. I have incorporated statistics to highlight the damage caused by this issue in my writing. I have used a range of language features to emphasize the severity of the issue.	Good health means a higher chance of living longer. So a lot of people pass away in this world from not eating properly, having bad addictions that leads to a serious issue. Thousands of people die every year from health problems and it needs to be stopped.
Challenge		I have stated the official view of the problem. I have used superlatives to emphasize the severity of this issue. I have used a conditional 'If 'or an imagining statement to emphasize how this could be a bigger problem in the future.	Around to 5 to 12 million people per year die from bad health and issues with addiction to drugs. How are we going to stop this? It's interesting isn't it because it's hard to save that many people per year it's frightening to hear that number of people who die every year.

Specify Problem (orange heptagon icon)		Through my vocabulary choice, I have stated how the problem makes me feel and how it may seem to the listener. I have provided a counteracting existing viewpoint if it is appropriate.	So the main problem about this i have mentioned it many times in this speech it has to be said or this problem won't be solved. Most people in this world don't want anyone to suffer if all those people in the world helped this virus and health thing will be over.
Solution (orange mountain with flag icon)		I have stated possible solutions to the problem. I have used effective vocabulary to persuade the audience to get on board to make a difference . I have used strong words and phrases that relate to how we can fix/improve this issue.	So how do we solve this problem? Well it's difficult to solve a lot of problems but this one is near impossible to solve. The main problem about this is that when all these virus's start coming into this world it's invisible, It's an invisible enemy which makes it harder to stop.
Change (orange caterpillar and butterfly icon)		I have used an imagine/noticing sentence to persuade the audience of how things could be if we make a change. I have used positive vocabulary and phrases to inspire positive thoughts into the minds of the audience if we make a change.	How can we be the change the world needs. Everyone knows the world needs to change, people can't stand living in this world if it continues to be a horrific disaster.
Call to Action (orange megaphone icon)		I have used language features such as rhetorical questions to appeal to the emotions of the audience to act now.	Lets stop this crisis now! Come on people let's help all these people who suffer from addiction loneliness. So a lot of people in this world react to loss differently people just move on and live it for the rest of their lives and a lot of people get sad and in there own bubble and get addicted to things they shouldn't.

Aims		I have stated the 3 aims that I would like to see in order to achieve our overarching goal.	How are we going to direct this situation? People have goals for this situation by 2030 to have all people taken care of in this world.
Act Together		I have stated how we can work together to achieve this goal. I have emphasized that we can't do this alone.	How are we going to act together? Everybody needs to work together or nothing will be solved. So are you going to help the world and act together with all the good people helping out or are you going to stay home and do nothing about it.
Big Finish		My final chunk of writing ends on a positive note that inspires the audience to get on board and make a difference. I have incorporated a quote, slogan or a metaphor into my final chunk to empower people to make a difference.	So that was my speech about Good health and Well being and i hope you got my message that this needs to be stopped and it's a world issue and it's the biggest problem right now so yeah.
