[REDACTED]

[REDACTED] He became homeless, sleeping wherever he could, surviving through petty theft and sheer will.

He was eventually caught and imprisoned for a short while. After his release, Robert tried to piece himself back together and find a legitimate job. But with a record and a past like his, no one wanted to take a chance—until a Nahual named Joaquin Pozo, owner of a taco truck called “EL TACO LOCO” hired him without asking too many questions.

Robert stuck to the kitchen, running the front with a gruff tone, a sharp tongue, and a tired heart. It wasn’t until later that he realized the job was tied to illegal dealings—drug trades and shady business behind the scenes.

He didn’t want to be involved. But with mounting financial pressure, he gritted his teeth and stayed.

In the long run... things didn’t turn out so bad...
