A list of weird facts about Canada

Canada is a country that boasts its fair share of weird and wonderful facts, making it a land of intriguing curiosities. Below are some facts that you may or may not be aware of!

Get screeched in Newfoundland

One of the peculiar facts about Canada is the unusual tradition found in Newfoundland, where kissing a dead cod is considered a cultural practice. This tradition involves puckering up and giving a smooch to a codfish, followed by a shot of rum called Skreech.

When you find yourself in this province, immerse yourself in the warmth of Newfoundland hospitality, and don't forget to partake in the unique experience of "Kissing the Cod" at the local bar.

In Churchill Manitoba, nobody locks their doors

Many areas in the world agree it is common knowledge to lock your doors to prevent strangers from entering. However, In the northern town of Churchill, Manitoba, residents have a fascinating approach to security – they don't lock the doors to their houses or cars.

Why, you may wonder? Well, this unique practice is due to the town's location in the heart of Polar Bear Alley. In Churchill, polar bears roam freely, making their way towards the Hudson Bay. The locals have developed a coexistence with these magnificent creatures, learning to adapt to their presence. It's worth noting that Churchill proudly holds the title of being the Polar Bear Capital of the world, adding to the town's extraordinary charm.

Canadians put milk in bags

Yes, you heard us right. Canada is home to a truly distinctive practice: the use of milk bags. It may sound peculiar, but it's a real thing. While many Canadians may not consume a lot of milk personally, it's interesting to note that a significant portion of the population, about 75%, still opt for bagged milk. In fact, bagged milk is evident even in large retail stores like Costco. It's just one of those quirky and unique aspects that make Canada a fascinating place.

Canada has national parks that are bigger than many countries.

Wood Buffalo National Park in Alberta surpasses the combined size of Denmark and Switzerland, spanning over an impressive 44,000 square kilometers. Similarly, Nahanni National Park Reserve in the Northwest Territories exceeds the area of Israel, covering more than 30,000 square kilometers.

These vast expanses showcase the immense scale of these Canadian national parks, highlighting the remarkable natural wonders that can be found within the country's borders.

In Dawson City Yukon you can drink a toe

Dawson City in Yukon presents an unconventional beverage experience known as the Sour Toe Cocktail, where brave individuals consume a whiskey drink containing an actual human toe.

This peculiar tradition involves donated toes that have been severed due to frostbite or other circumstances. It's worth noting that swallowing the toe results in a hefty fine of $2500. However, in the event of accidental ingestion, generous individuals step forward to contribute freshly severed toes to ensure the continuation of this bizarre yet fascinating practice.

A list of fun facts about Canada

Canada has 2 official languages

Canada, as a country, recognizes and embraces two official languages. While Quebec stands out as the primary French-speaking province, it's worth noting that New Brunswick also boasts a significant French Speaking population. The remainder of Canada predominantly speaks English, but French instruction is commonly offered in schools, and bilingual signage can be observed throughout the country.
