

Sash Window Replacement Bristol

You live in a period house with tatty wooden sliding sash windows...

They rattle when it's windy. They allow rain, wind, and flying bugs in. They're tough to open or are stuck shut by paint layers. The sash cords have frayed or come undone. In the winter, condensation drips off your window boards and your heating bills make you cry. But you adore them regardless.

You don't want to ruin the appearance of your period home by using uPVC "mock sash" casements.

We all appreciate wood. Traditional, sliding sash windows are constructed of it. We don't want anything else in their place.

The main reason for this is the expense. High-quality, high-performing, long-lasting, well-engineered timber windows are not cheap. Unfortunately, it's difficult to locate them; even though there are a lot of firms who produce wood windows, few do it effectively.

If you can't afford to replace the entire window, there are firms who will re-frame them and install new double glazed sashes instead.

Is it a smart idea?

Is it worth the money?

In our view, it depends on who does the job. There are several people who claim they will replace sliding sash windows, but there are few that can do so properly. Many claim to be able to restore sliding sash windows. The truth is, only a handful of truly specialist companies in the UK have the knowledge and experience to do the work to an excellent standard.

If you're in doubt about anything, do more research. Do your homework and obtain at least three quotations before making a decision. If the business is FENSA licensed, this means that they have been thoroughly checked out.

If you're considering having your sash windows replaced, here's what you should look for in a reputable sliding sash window specialist:

A good reputation: The company should have an excellent reputation and be able to provide numerous happy customers as references.

Accreditation: The company should be properly accredited, such as being FENSA licensed.

The Right Skills and Experience: The team carrying out the work should have a great deal of experience in sliding sash window replacement. They should also understand the intricacies of working with this kind of window.

The Right Tools for the Job: The company should use only the best tools and materials to carry out the work. They should also have a thorough understanding of how to properly install double glazed units into sliding sash windows.

A Quality Guarantee: The company should offer a guarantee on their workmanship.

This will give you peace of mind that the job has been carried out to the highest standard.
