

The winter days come to a close very early this time of the year, holidays have come and gone as the world gets ready for another trip around the sun. Around this time lime loves to prod around and see what activities are around to do with friends. Running around in the snow as well as making snow-pacas is always a fun activity. Inviting Sammy along to the fun outdoors. Bundled up in a winter hat and scarf the green colored pacapillar waits outside for their friend to arrive. Watching the flurries fall down as it coats the already white ground in yet another layer of chilly fluff.

The sugary drink sloshes around inside the paca as it bounces around, the bundled cloth around the small creature's neck coming undone. Bumbledore, who was already there and waiting for their friend as well, comes over to fix a limes scarf. Laughing along and telling the other to stay still. Both pacapillars perk up as their friend arrives, knocking on the door and happily exclaiming it was them. Bumbledore would open up the door to Sammy, already covered in snow. They would bound out into the deep white sea, their tail wagging around happily. Lime would quickly be out and running around right after them. The last one still left inside, Dumbledore, was getting ready still. Slipping on some warm earmuffs before coming outside to play as well.

Soon the light snow would turn into a heavier fall, the large flakes falling on the friends as they would make snow angels, getting up and shaking off the snow. Bounding around and being careful not to squish their new creations in the snow. Lime would suggest a new idea to the two, a snow fort... maybe even an igloo. They agree on the idea, setting out the plans for the biggest igloo they could make. A smaller sized paca, bagel, would catch wind of this, popping up in the snow beside them to ask if they could help. It would startle the hard working pacas, nearly toppling one over as it would be holding a large igloo wall up as the other was making the other to keep it up. With each step, they got closer to making the large igloo a reality, even with the day getting darker, into the afternoon. The walls went up and soon enough the entrance.

The group of pacas would take a quick break, going inside to warm up and have lunch. The hot cocoa and warm grilled cheese being passed around and eaten. Bundled up by the fire and running their wet clothing through the dryer so that they could go back out and finish the inside of their igloo later. The four chat happily and watch some specials that were on, running after the holidays were over, as well as the pre-recorded shows that lime kept on the tv box. Eventually, bagel gets up and brings their plates to the sink, the rest in tow. Lime would start bundling themselves up messily again with Sammy helping them this time. Bumble already out the door and working on the pretty igloo that was now shimmering with the sun bouncing off of the small crystalline pieces of snow packed tightly together.

Soon enough their igloo was finished, inside and out. They had made a small snow table inside for fun, playing around inside, and making little snowpacapillars to protect the front of the igloo. Eventually, Sammy had to leave alongside bumble. Lime and bagel continue to hang out and enjoy the chilly weather and snowy scape. Making a small ramp and playing on that until the sun set and it was time to go back inside. Bagel would head back to their home and lime would go back inside to get warm once again.