[Article title and subtitle if applicable]

[Write a clear, specific title that reflects the research question and the material examined. This template uses Constantia throughout. The finished manuscript must contain 5,000–8,500 words in total, including the title, author information, abstract, keywords, main text, tables, captions, footnotes, declarations, and bibliography. Include at least 30 references. Use Chicago Manual of Style, 17th ed. (Notes and Bibliography), with Mendeley required to manage citations, footnotes, and the bibliography. Remove all bracketed guidance before submission.]

ABSTRACT

[In one paragraph, state the research problem or purpose, approach and principal sources or data, main findings, and contribution. Write what the study actually found; do not add claims not supported by the article.]

KEYWORDS

[Provide focused terms or short phrases identifying the subject, core concepts, methods or context. Avoid broad or redundant terms.]

Introduction

[Explain the specific research problem, why it matters, what previous studies have established or debated, and what remains unresolved. State the research question or objective and the contribution of the article. Show how Islamic ethical thought informs the question or the analysis; merely mentioning Islamic ethics is not sufficient.]

Method

[Describe what was actually done and how the evidence was analyzed. Identify the research approach, materials or participants, selection rationale, analytical steps, and relevant limitations. Textual and historical studies should identify sources and editions. Empirical studies should explain data collection, analysis, and ethical safeguards. Conceptual and comparative studies should explain how arguments or cases were selected and evaluated. Labels such as "library research" are not a substitute for methodological detail.]

Results

[Present findings that answer the research question. Support each finding with identifiable data, documents, textual passages, comparisons, or reasoned analysis. Keep evidence distinguishable from interpretation. Conceptual and historical research may present well-supported analytical findings rather than numerical results. Use subsections, tables, and figures only where they improve clarity.]

[Subsection heading]

[Develop one clear analytical point using appropriate evidence. Explain how the finding advances the overall argument. Remove this example subsection if it is not needed.]

Table 1. [Short, informative title; remove example table and caption if not needed]

Source: [Source and any explanatory notes; remove if not applicable].

[Insert a figure only if it helps explain evidence, a process, or a conceptual relationship. Provide a clear caption, source attribution, and explanation in the main text. Remove this placeholder if no figure is needed.]

Discussion

[Explain why the findings matter and how they relate to previous studies and relevant concepts. Discuss agreement, disagreement, alternative explanations, and limitations where appropriate. Develop the Islamic ethical analysis with identifiable reasons and sources. Do not repeat the Results section in different words or make claims beyond the evidence.]

Conclusion

[Answer the research question directly. Summarize the findings and their scholarly contribution, then indicate implications or unanswered questions supported by the study. Do not introduce new evidence, make broader claims than the analysis supports, or simply repeat the abstract.]

Declarations

Use of Artificial Intelligence (AI). [State whether AI tools were used and describe their actual role in writing or research, following JIEI policy. Identify substantive AI use and check all claims and sources. If no AI was used, state that fact.]

Funding. [Name funding agencies and grant numbers where applicable; otherwise state accurately that no specific research funding was received.]

Conflict of Interest. [Disclose relevant financial, professional, or other competing interests; if none exist, state that accurately.]

Bibliography

[Include at least 30 distinct, relevant sources that were actually consulted and cited. Use Chicago Manual of Style, 17th edition, Notes and Bibliography: numbered footnotes for citations and an alphabetically arranged bibliography. Mendeley is mandatory for managing footnote citations and the bibliography; select the Chicago 17th-edition Notes and Bibliography style, check the software output, and verify all reference details. Check names, titles, dates, editions, journal details, pages, and DOI URLs where available. Do not invent references or add sources merely to reach the minimum. Remove this instruction and insert the full bibliography.]
