As you recall last weeks event's were brutal for Herald this week though they get even worse as I must have reader advisory for this because its so scary it will make you look around and wonder if there really was something moving around in that closet, so creepy it will make you want to run away and actually do that homework that you were told to do if you choose to keep reading you have been WARNED. It all started when Herald decided to buy a creepy mansion becouse well why wouldn't you and he decided to move in as soon as possible of course this mansion wwaa in the woods and the closest person was on a diffrent planet that was in a diffrent solar system that was in a diffrent galaxy far far far far far far far far far away. Cue the creepy music now when Herald first moved in he thought that it was wonderful and puked rainbow in glee the whole house became the color of a rainbow and he liked that quite a bit he then began hearing noises at first he thought that he was just hearing things but slowly it got louder and LOUDER and LOUDDDERRR until his ears hurt and he had to put ear plugs in he was trying to find the noise when he realized something the noise sounded quite familiar he then realized that he say a little head poke out from the wall right in front of him and he realized IT WAS HIS GOOD FRIEND CORNELIOUS THE GHOST he shouted Cornelious's name and the ghost popped out of the wall and they had a good long laugh Herald decided that it would be better to move back to the saylamih and to his little apartment where he could go outside with out being scared and puking rainbows.

THE END :)

Parent Response: John, nearly all of your sentences in this week's submission are run-ons, but all is forgiven. Why? Because this work is simply fabulous. Foreboding, tense and yet simultaneously humorous. You are juxtaposing genres here, with touches of theater, fable, horror and, dare I suggest, even poetry.

While I am disappointed that extraneous vomit makes a return appearance, I am keen to learn more about the mysterious Cornelius. I sense an allegorical nod to Cornelius, the biblical Roman Centurion who converted to Christianity. Or perhaps Don Cornelius of Soul

Train fame? (Aside: ask your mother to find some episodes on YouTube and you can dance along.)

Pray tell, what and where is this “saylamih” to which Herald has apparently returned? Is this some double entendre commingling sausage meat (salami) with some Persian or Arabic entity? Or merely a suggestion that unicorns enjoy spicy sandwiches? I suppose the mystery must continue until your next composition.

I miss you and hope to see you next weekend.

Love, Daddy

Girl Power Industries:

Dear Heidi and Justin

Hello! I hope all is well with you on this fine day. Today we presented our curiosity projects to the grade and it couldn't have gone better. In math we have been working on Unit Measurements and Percentages. I am so thrilled to be started up the Percentages unit because it is one of my favorite math units. It is really nice to be doing things that are more challenging but until then I will be working with the things I am most familiar with. But I enjoy getting better at every thing that I already know how to do.

Today is P.I.W.A (Public Issues and World Affairs) in Social Studies and I am really excited to figure out what we are going to be studying today. In Social Studies this week we have watched a movie called Glory Road which is about a the first basket ball team with colored players. The movie really opened my eyes on how people were treated back then. It makes me proud to know that we have raised the Black Lives Matter flag and that we do not per mote discrimination. I am excited that it is the end of the week but I really will miss this class this weekend.

We have ELA (English Language Arts) today and I hope that we can read the book Counting On Grace. Counting On Grace is a book about real child labor in america and how we dealt with it. I think we will be taking a very important quiz today that I am pretty sure I am going to nail. The book we are reading is really amazing and it just took an unexpected turn. There are so many thing we are learning about but I am a little tight on time.

In science we have been working on the Newton's 3 Laws Of Motion which is on of the most fascinating topic we have worked with. My group of fellow scientists is Gracie Morris and Chloe Suskin, together we are the dream team. We have worked on naming certain laws of motion and doing experience to support our claims. It is one of my favorite topics I've ever learned about and I am thrilled to be learning about this more later today.

This weekend I am doing a dance recital and it is going to raise money for people in the Congo in need of it. I am excited to invite you to the performance and hope you will want to go. After we are going to the Miss Lizz's house for a pot luck to celebrate. I would love it if at least one of you attend the pot luck and the other can bring my moody teenage brother home to play video games and feast. I really hope you enjoy the rest of your day.

Best Wishes,

Sincerely Avery
