Feminist movements 'in our times' are important reminders of a deepening and historical commitment to queer, trans, black, intergenerational and intersectional feminisms, praxis and futures. Feminist solidarities that are founded on dissonance, discomfort and a desire for transformation through a mutual and charged dialogue. These important movements 'in our times' emphasises how unlearning, accountability and engaging with conflict in productive ways might be the most difficult, yet also the most necessary task of feminism.

Feminism 'in our times' continues to account for the activist leadership capacities and desires of young people across the globe. Young people are engaging in a range of creative activisms (e.g. ALT marching, vlogging, hash-tagging and streaming) that are responsive, situated, relational and accountable. By adopting guerrilla tactics, they are practicing an ethos of survival and the search for a sense of feminist wwwcommunities. Much like adult allies, young people are also invested in the futures that they may inherit and make.

Feminist projects 'in our times' leak from the streets to classroom spaces; they cut across pedagogical moments and research encounters; they trickle from the pages of this paper to the twitter feeds of colleagues, friends and strangers alike; betwixt and between the private and the professional. They include the relationships and bonds that often go unseen; the important intimacies of the communities, communications and practices in which feminist work is embedded and enmeshed. They are a reminder that we can never know in advance how our research-activisms-teaching comes to matter.

I've compiled a legislative tracker for anti-LGBTQ bills. As of today, there are at least 58 bills:

27 bills banning gender affirming care

15 bills banning trans people from sports

6 bills banning drag

Will update going forward. Follow along.
