

It would be a normal day on The Isle of Rotoscope... well I can't say that, your perception of normal might not be getting into a street fight of pie tossing, or solving a mystery in a manor, or having a massive mecha on standby in case Clover throws a fit again. The ruler of these lands, Sally Sillington, would be getting up for the day, wondering what adventures await. She walks to the window in her jammies and opens it up with a "Good morning Folks!". She then gets dressed, packs her things, and goes into the bathroom to do her hair. She finishes up her hairdo into its classic round afro shape before putting on her crown and starting to brush her teeth. She notices something about her mirror after humming her ABCs once: it's warped. She goes to reach towards it before a pure black hand grabs her and rips her through the mirror, a void of white filled with mirrors and broken glass surround her as she sees the thing that grabbed her... is a well dressed, glitching humanoid with a head resemblant of a worm on a string. She screams, kicking and relying to escape

"Woah! Woah! Woah! Calm-just calm it...! Calm it!" he stutters as Sally begins to calm down. He begins to speak again "look, I'm a writer who broke a hole in space-time trying to meet a quota. My computer is still back at my place, but I need your help. I need to work with Alternative Storylines with you and a few others, and hopefully I can make something original before my editor comes to my place looking for me, and I have to explain to her why I haven't been getting things done. Do you understand?"

Sally, after being bombarded with information, raises a finger. "Let me get this straight," she requests "You want me to be in a set of new stories that should help you come up with your own story?" The thing's eyes darted from her, to the side and back.

"Yeah."

Sally smiles, chuckling "Well ain't this fun? Count me in! Where am I going first?" The being looks at a mirror, before shoving sally through into an unknown fate.
