“ I hope I get to see a lot of cute costumes this Halloween! ”

◆ Story Description ◆

Mother-like Mao Mao giving out candies to the little ones!

◆ Halloween Quest ◆

The soft oranges, browns, and yellows of tree leaves rustled outside as both children and adults alike dressed up in all sorts of halloween costumes. There was nothing that Mao Mao enjoyed more than seeing the cute little kids and adults, in absolute joy running around from house to house for candy. Although, because there were indoor rooms here like apartments in her new building, she wondered if they still took in the halloween spirit? Mao Mao dressed up in a Mary Poppins outfit this Halloween. Complete with an umbrella and a suitcase that she put candy inside of. After all, it just felt fitting for a grem who used to be a Nanny for several human children. Children were like the joys of her life, the only thing she was ever sad about from them was that they grew up way too fast.

Mao Mao gently placed a few Jack-o-Lanterns around outside her own dorm-like room. She also made a sign to hang out on her door showing that she was participating for Halloween. It said, “Knock for a Treat! Happy Halloween!” That way others would know she was celebrating the holiday as well. It still worried her a little that she wouldn’t get any trick or treaters but instead of focusing her energy on such a thing, the grem tried to focus on more positive aspects. Mao Mao gently tied together cute little treat bags that had two little gag toys in it and the rest with a handful of candy to fill it. She used twist ties so then no one had to struggle very hard to open it.

She took a cup of hot tea and turned the tv on low to a spooky show (It was Halloweentown, Don’t tell her it’s not as scary as one would think!). Although while she sat, her eyes kept on glancing over to the clock. There should be guests at any moment now! Her tail wagging softly from the idea of seeing people in their costumes. When the clock finally ticked towards the proper time, she had long forgotten the movie. Lifting herself up from her seat and instead waiting by the door instead. Maybe she was just a little too excited?

After about ten minutes of standing around, she would hear the sounds of a light knocking at her door. It sounds like her very first trick or treater was here! How delightful! Her tail wagged behind her softly as she took her fabric suitcase full of special treat bags and opened the door warmly, two small human children wearing a princess outfit and an outfit for a frog spoke happily, “Trick or Treat!” Mao Mao smiled softly, “Oh my look at how cute your outfits are! Princess and the Frog? How lovely! Here are your treats!” She would happily open up her bag for them and pull out a baggy for each kid, dropping it into their bags, “There you go! Happy Halloween!”

The little ones would thank her and turn towards the next door. That gave her perfect opportunity to poke her head out in curiosity to see if there were others. To her delightful surprise, there were quite a lot of trick or treaters all in their own costumes, a flourish of people dressed up as animals, characters from their favorite medias, she even saw someone dressed up as a taco! How silly! Well, her worries were for nothing, which was so good! She took a deep breath and closed her door again to wait for the next trick or treater. Her only worry now would be if she prepared enough of these baggies for everyone! As the Night moved along, more and more bags were given out to the trick or treaters.

The night began to slow down at around 7 PM which was a good thing because Mao Mao only had a few bags left! She was able to make a few on the spot but they had the last bits of candy left. From several knocks throughout the day to maybe one every 20 minutes. It seemed as if her neighbors had already pulled in for the day but...Mao Mao didn't want to risk pulling everything in and a late person didn't get to have candy. She waited patiently by the door. 7 Pm turned to 7:30 PM and then finally it turned 8 PM...Well maybe there wasn't going to be anymore? She opened the door to her apartment, to take the jack-o-lanterns inside. The moment she opened the door, she would catch a very familiar fox-like figure outside her door, dressed up in her own costume! Nikita seemed to be very excited, with her tails waving softly behind her. She barked up happily, "Treat Please!!" Mao Mao looked at her bag and then at dear little Nikita before smiling softly, "Your outfit is so so cute Nikita! So cute that I'm going to give you ALL of my candy! Make sure you share with the weregrems too, okay?" She then would empty out the remaining treats into Nikita's bag. It seemed to really make that fox so happy with how she was waving her tails around all excitedly. It made her very own tail wag softly from happiness. Nikita beamed happily before thanking her and then running off to another door who left their light on. Mao Mao felt a soft warmth in her chest and a feeling of satisfaction as she began putting the Jack-o-Lanterns and things away. What a wonderful evening. She couldn't wait to call her best friend, Naera, to talk to her about her day.
