

5 Ways to conquer working A Job while in college

1. Create a designated study workspace:

one way to keep yourself productive throughout schooling is creating a space that can improve your learning. Your learning spaces should be clean and organized

2. Become a master of your time:

Time is oh so precious when it comes to juggling both work and school. How you spend your time is crucial, you should be scheduling everything from study time to your free time. Biggest tip? Get stuff done right away for example, if you have a whole semester to write a paper start writing it ASAP

3. Communicate, communicate, communicate:

having open communication with your managers and professors will make all the difference. Make sure you, your professors and your managers are all on the same page. There may be times where you would need to ask for an extension on a paper or more time to complete a task at work because of all your responsibilities with school, work, and personal things.

Communicating your needs will alleviate any added stressors you may feel

4. Trust in your abilities:

Consistently choosing to believe in yourself will allow you to follow through. If you doubt your abilities you're more likely to burn out. Keeping your family and friends close will also benefit you, as they await graduation to encourage you.

5. Remember your long-term goals:

Keep your eyes on the prize! Remembering why you started off this journey is what will fuel you. Nothing lasts forever, this stressful yet rewarding chapter in your life will pass and it'll all be worth it.
