

WORK BASED LEARNING

Platt offers its students a unique opportunity in that eligible students can begin working in their trade while still in high school. This is called Work Based Learning. Employers take on students to train and/or fulfill apprenticeship hours, and students earn a competitive wage. Students work in place of coming to school during the trade cycle. Typically juniors and seniors take part in this program, but eligibility can begin as early as sophomore year.