Personal Stats

Gender: Cis Male (He/Him)

Sexuality: Pansexual

Personality: Cocky, snarky, rough-and-tumble with a heart of gold and good intentions. Loyal and protective, but somewhat short-tempered. Considers himself a smooth talker, but can be awkward and brutally honest. Very flirty with just about anyone he finds attractive. Has dealt with a lot of past trauma, and copes with humor and breathing techniques. He likes listening to music, playing guitar, doodling, drinking/smoking with friends, and being outdoors, to name a few things.

DETAILS/THINGS TO KNOW

- Jayden is permanently semi-shifted, even in human form, thanks to an overload of lycanthropic genetics during his mother's pregnancy. As a result, he is stuck with paw pad-like markings on his hands and feet, claw-like nails, protruding canines (top and bottom, only top are visible with mouth closed), and pointed ears.
- Many factors influence his shifting/transformations, but the biggest ones are emotional state, hormone/stress levels (for example: high cortisol, high dopamine, etc.), and injury. These things also influence the levels of pain he feels when transforming (more stress/bad emotions = more pain.)
- Wolfsbane, when administered medicinally (capsules), is used to prevent shifts for up to 24 hours. It takes 1-2 capsules to prevent normal shifts, but Primal shifts require 2+ capsules which must be taken between 11pm to 2am on the night of a full moon, or when he begins to feel one happening.
- Were-form (regular werewolf form, "first" stage), can be triggered at any time, and is as sentient as human form, as well as capable of speech. He has a much shorter temper and is more prone to violent outbursts, but can also be Big Pubby from time to time, depending on emotional state. Almost always a horny mess, if he's not in a terrible mood or in peril.
- Primal form ("second" stage, bigger and more feral), is only able to be triggered under extreme stress/injury, and/or full moons. Think something along the lines of the death of a loved one, breaking a limb, etc. Primal form is larger, stronger, and less controllable than were-form. More like a traditional "monster movie" werewolf. Primarily moves on all fours, but can stand on his hind legs. Very angry, and VERY violent.

- Certain substances can influence his shifting abilities, for example: Alcohol can make shifts happen more easily/frequently, and weed helps keep him calm enough to hold back more. Jayden was somewhat known for getting into drunken bar fights in his early adulthood, much to the misfortune of the bar patrons. He never swings first, though, if he can help it.
- Silver acts as an allergen of sorts, and is non-lethal. It causes burning, rashes, and discomfort when in contact with his skin. Ingesting it would induce immediate vomiting.
- Pre-puberty, Jayden would only experience partial shifting, where certain body parts/sections of his body would shift momentarily. After he hits about 16 or 17, he starts slowly experiencing full shifts only on full moons, with less control over his were-form. By the time he's 21 or 22, he's fully capable of shifting at any time and can control his were-form (almost) completely, but doesn't start experiencing Primal shifts until around the age of 25-27.

HOW DID HE GET HERE?

Born and raised in the backwoods of Massachusetts, Jayden was the child of a musician and a witch. His father was in a prolific rock band that was big in the non-human scene, while his mother provided spells and remedies to the locals in exchange for goods and services. Jayden's father was a drunk, and an angry one at that. He would frequently come home shitfaced and hurt his wife, sometimes injuring her badly. She was a kind soul, but perhaps too kind, constantly giving his father the benefit of the doubt and living in denial. Their relationship was rocky as all hell, but eventually, Jayden's mom got pregnant.

One night, Jayden's father shifted during the full moon and bit his mother while she was pregnant with him. She hadn't secured him into his restraints well enough, and as a result, he broke free and attacked. The overload of lycanthropic genetic material in her body caused Jayden to almost immediately begin to shift, while still developing. His mother, now given lycanthropy herself, struggled with shifting during pregnancy. It put extra stress on her already struggling body. When he was born, it was visually obvious he had gotten his father's lycan genetics, as he appeared to be stuck in the beginning of a shift, with obvious non-human features. His mother, while horrified, swore to protect him from falling into the same patterns as his father.

Sadly, though, she wasn't able to keep that promise, as Jayden's father had a second unexpectedly violent shift about a year and a half later, during which his mother was killed trying to protect him.

His father was left to take care of him for 6 years, all the while abusing and neglecting him, until Jayden's grandparents stepped in and unofficially adopted him. They took good care of him, but by the time Jayden hit the age of 20, both of them had passed.

After Jayden's grandparents passed, he was forced to move back in with his father, as much as he hated the idea. His father was a terrible man, and spared no time in falling back into old habits with him. They were constantly fighting about anything and everything, and Jayden was consistently stress-shifting as a result. They'd both often take the night of a full moon to scrap it out, knowing that they could both handle the attack, but Jayden's father was mostly to blame. That, combined with the verbal attacks, were weighing so heavily on Jayden's mental health. There were too many nights that ended in blood and tears, and it was too much for him. He eventually decided that anything, anywhere, was better than here. So he made the decision to live out of his car, on the road to protect his lycanthropic identity from being revealed. He didn't like to stay in one place for too long, or else folks would start getting suspicious of the mysteriously butchered livestock and the alarming amount of ambulance sirens when he was lashing out in fits of rage.

After about 5 years of living in his car, travelling the east coast, he finally decided to settle back in Massachusetts. He still didn't stick around very often, but at least he had a home address, and it wasn't close enough to his degenerate father to matter anyway. His landlord was familiar with non-human folk, and so understood his situation and would let him basically keep his stuff there, as long as he paid rent and occasionally did yard work.

Jayden, currently 32, is a travelling bodyguard/strongman of sorts, usually sticking to jobs where he gets paid under the table and is allowed to shift if needed. He's good at networking, and has a number of human and non-human clientele. Unfortunately, the nature of his job market tends to lead him towards working with some pretty unsavory types, but it gets him a living wage, and they know well enough to not fuck with him.
