Task: Read the text and answer the questions.

When John finished school, he had to make an important decision. He needed to choose what he wanted to study and what kind of job he wanted to have in the future. John thought about many different professions. He was excited but also a little nervous because this choice would shape his life in a big way.

First, John thought about becoming a doctor or a nurse. He liked the idea of helping people feel better. But he also knew that studying medicine could be very hard and would take many years. Then he thought about being a teacher. He loved helping his friends with their homework, and he thought teaching children could be a nice job. However, John wasn't sure he wanted to spend every day in a classroom.

Then, he considered some jobs that are more active. John thought about becoming a firefighter or a police officer. He liked the idea of being brave and helping people in his community. He also thought about being a pilot or a driver because he loved traveling and seeing new places. But he wasn't sure he wanted to spend so much time away from home.

Finally, John thought about creative jobs. He loved music and art, so he thought about becoming a musician or an artist. He also enjoyed writing stories, so maybe he could be a writer one day. But John was unsure if these jobs would make him enough money. He also thought about being a scientist or an engineer because he was good at solving problems, and these jobs could be interesting and pay well.

After thinking about all the options, John decided he would like to study to become an architect. He realized he enjoyed designing and building things, and he thought this job could be a good mix of creativity and problem-solving. Now, he felt excited about his future and looked forward to learning more about his chosen profession.
