About Lilith Jane

Last updated 11/22/2022

My name is Lilith. I have been reading Tarot since 2017. I became a certified life coach and Biddy Tarot Advisor in 2022. I am a solitary witch practicing personal magic for self-transformation. I love what I do and have spent a lot of time over the years learning and bettering my skill sets to improve my services for my clients. I can't promise to fix all of your problems, but I can offer insights on ways to make improvements and changes that can potentially open new doors of opportunities for you.

What I do is built on honesty, integrity, truth, authenticity, and inclusivity. I am not here to judge or condemn you. I am here as support through my services provided. With that being said, I do not tolerate disrespect or ignorance when it comes to the communities that I am a part of which involve being an Asian-American, LGBTIQ+ member, and overall mental health advocate. I am an abuse and trauma survivor. I have spent years unlearning social conditioning and learning new ways to be a better person. Being someone who had experienced sexual trauma as a child and abusive relationships throughout my life, I strongly offer support and advocate for those who have been in or are currently experiencing terrible, nightmareish situations. Encouraging self-empowerment and shedding light on personal safety and wellbeing is my goal.

It is not my place to speak for everyone, but I will speak for myself when I say that I believe we need change. I believe that in order for this to happen, we as individuals must take accountability for ourselves and our responses to situations. We must stand up to our oppressors and abusers to advocate for what is inherently our truth. I, again, speak for myself when I say that as I have learned through my experiences, we as humans want to be seen and heard at a deeper level. We need to support each other. Underneath our egos and identities that we adhere to, we seek connection, understanding, and safety. If we as a collective were to stop and just listen and acknowledge one another, we might be able to find better ways to coexist. There is enough for everybody, but everybody has to do their part. And that is where it starts with you. That's where it starts with me. We, as individuals, must prioritize educating ourselves on wellness, patience, communication, and the world around us. Trust is not something to be given freely, but understanding that trust is something necessary in order to work harmoniously together.

When I speak of faith, I do not speak of religious faith. I speak of trust. To me they are synonymous. Trusting takes courage and strength. This is like a muscle that needs constant conditioning. When we fail to practice trust, we lose a pillar of our own freedom. We fear for ourselves and others. We lack the initiative it takes to step outside into the unknown and face head on the challenges and opportunities that we so desperately seek. In order to create change, you must trust in yourself. This takes time, action, diligence, and practice. You start off small with a daily task. Then as your trust within yourself grows, you begin to take on larger responsibilities. That is how you expand beyond what you are in this current moment. You think outside the box. You ask those questions that could spark inspiration. You move and you flow. You are no longer stagnant or stuck.

Tarot is a tool for exploring your depths. It has helped me so much over the years as I have learned to interpret the messages and feelings for myself and others around me. It has shown me hard truths and difficult lessons. It has shown me my path in times when I didn't trust anyone else enough to ask for advice. But at the end of the day, the cards only ever reflected what was already within me. My own inner wisdom and light.

I have always loved Tarot even when I did not understand what the true functions were. I purchased my first Tarot deck when I was perhaps close to the age of 12. It sat on my bookshelf for days as I would walk past it curious as to what it would show me. One day I finally mustered the nerve to unwrap it from the plastic casing and sturdy box enclosure only to find that I had no idea what any of the cards meant. I spread them all across the floor in my grandma's living room frustratingly searching for answers. I felt it in my body that there was knowledge there and so many answers, but I just could not understand. I felt so upset and discouraged that I never touched the deck again until I passed it along to a friend a few years later.

A part of the truth of my trauma included my abuser using my own beliefs against me. Even as a young child, I always knew there was more beyond this physical plane. I always felt my connection to plants, animals, and spirits. I always knew there was more than the eyes could see. I was conditioned to believe that I was the only one like myself and that I was an outcast. I was made to believe that if I ever shared my gifts, that some unknown force would take me away from my family and friends and that I would be locked up in a place far away never to see my life at home again.

As the years passed, I was able to escape the nightmare that I was in, only to find myself thrown into another one. Not knowing or understanding the extent of the damage that had been done to me, I continued on just to find that I had landed in yet another abusive situation. My self worth and trust within myself was beyond an all time low. I believed in self-empowerment, but never knew how to take action and implement it in a way that could better my life. I woke up one day not wanting to leave my bed. I felt an indescribable weight on my body and a deep exhaustion that I couldn't shake. I didn't know what it was so of course I took to the internet. "Depression". "Anxiety". I had heard those terms before, but never identified with them until that moment. I had heard others speak of therapy, so I soon sought that and thus began my journey towards a better life for myself.

I'll spare the details of what happened in between, but not long after I found myself experiencing my first divorce at the age of 25 in 2017. At that point, I no longer knew who I was or what I was going to do. Outside of all of those past traumatic experiences, I did not know how to live. I was afraid of everyone and everything. That was also the time where I began delving more into my craft and I sought out the Tarot again. I did not begin with the traditional Rider Waite Smith deck, although now, I would highly recommend it to any beginner who would be interested in learning the basics and foundations of Tarot. My first “official” deck that I still use to this day was the Halloween Tarot (Kipling West) whose artwork was inspired by the original Rider Waite Smith Tarot. These were images and symbols that I was familiar with and with that, I began building my trust for my intuition.

I spent the next several years unpacking everything that had happened to me while discovering parts of myself that were hidden away under the muck of those who had laid their hands on me. I found joy, courage, tenacity, and strength through my experiences. Tarot was there for me every step of the way. And while things were not perfect in any sense of the word, I certainly felt more complete as I regained what was once taken from me. I reached a point in my journey where I felt the call to go beyond the walls of my hometown to further explore my capabilities and test the knowledge I had learned over the years. I packed up my essentials, my 2 cats, took a massive leap of faith, and hauled my ass 1,200 miles away to the swampy, humid corners of Florida. (Mind you, I cried nearly every single day leading up to that moment and after.)

Florida is where I was able to truly focus on my personal growth, magical craft, and spirituality. I was given a beautiful opportunity that would end up placing me in an environment where I was surrounded by others like me. To be in a place where I could freely express all the facets of myself and not be condemned by my strangeness or gifts was something I would have never thought I would experience. And to add the icing on the vegan cake, I happened to meet the love of my life and we now share a happy home together with our 2 cats. As I began to accept and love myself more, my life began to reflect the changes around me. In just the span of 2 years, with more unpacking and co-healing through a healthy partnership, I can confidently say that I have arrived in a space where I am truly me. I feel loved, supported, and seen.

Through this journey of mine, I am now able to provide to you a service that is of incomprehensible value. You are only ever one decision away from taking intentional action that could change your life. In order to make those decisions, we must be able to zoom out and survey the bigger picture. We must be able to imagine the possibilities that lie beyond what we know in order to create space for what we want to change. This is where the Tarot can be of use. When paired with the right questions, seeking advice through the use of the Tarot can be a beautifully life changing experience.
