

Evaluation Essay - Labib Rahman, Jonathon Gerry, Clayton Athman

For Clayton's essay we found that a strength was that he tied together the challenges and the benefits and how one can result in the other. Also, he did well to give examples of how the challenges not only can affect an interview but problems worldwide. A weakness that was found in Clayton's paper was that there wasn't much of an introduction to the essay. It would have been more effective to have more distinct breaks between the introduction, body, and conclusion.

For Labib's essay there were a lot of really great ideas that could possibly arise during the interview and provided a lot of really good thoughts. However, some of the ideas could have been elaborated on a little more. Also, there could have been a little better thesis statement and/or introduction to the essay.

Jonathon's essay was very strong in the sense that it was really thorough and well thought out. All of his ideas were backed up with resources and there was an abundance of ideas presented. The only thing we found to be lacking was that some of the sentences did not flow properly and there were a few spelling errors.

We decided that the best essay was Jonathon's because of how thorough and well thought out it was, and he also had plenty of resources to back up his ideas.
