There is great momentum in research on the Antigonids, the dynasty of descendants of Antigonos who established themselves in the heartland of ancient Macedonia. Important publications in recent years include works on individual Antigonid rulers (D'Agostini 2019, Wheatley and Dunn 2020, Waterfield 2021, Nicholson 2023, Worthington 2023), commentaries of key texts (Landucci 2021, Rose forthcoming), studies of coinage (Kremydi 2018, Panagopoulou 2020, Hochard 2024), and inscriptions (e.g., Hatzopoulos 1996, 2021, Mari 2018, 2019, Paschidis et al. 2023). Increasingly, essential wider thematic studies are also being undertaken, on topics such as the Antigonid army and garrisons (Chrysafis forthcoming) and the Antigonid empire (Wallace, Soza, both forthcoming). The Antigonid Network has been running its yearly programme of online seminars since 2020-2021 and is now in its fifth year of activity. Research on the Antigonids is no longer just emerging but firmly establishing itself.

Now is a good moment, therefore, to reflect and consider where research on the Antigonids has taken us so far and where it could go next, beyond 2025. This online roundtable aims to provide a platform for this discussion, to bring together members of the Antigonid Network and interested researchers across disciplines, and to establish what the key issues and challenges in ongoing and future research on the Antigonids and Antigonid Macedonia are.
