

On the first day of English class, there is a lot of information that you will talk about and discuss with your teacher and classmates. It is very important that you pay attention, so you don't miss anything. Your teacher will ask you questions and will wait for your response. In American classrooms, the environment is interactive, which means the teacher and the students talk to each other a lot. Also, it is common for the students to talk in groups or pairs a lot and share ideas or opinions about something. On the first day, your teachers might share a new learning strategy or tip that will help increase your success in the class. Before too long, you will have a lot of knowledge in your brain and you will improve your English in no time. You might even use your new English skills to apply for a student job or a place on a university team! Good luck!
