

Scenario 1:

Your friend and you take a picture together. Your friend wants to post it online for everyone to see, but you do not want them to. What do you do?

A. You let your friend post it regardless. (yellow)	B. You report it once he or she posts it so that it will be taken down. (green)
C. You talk to your friend and share why you do not want the picture posted. (blue)	D. You un-tag yourself so no one knows it's you in the picture. (orange)

Scenario 2:

You just got home from school and you go straight online. You notice that your friend had posted a mean comment about your teacher. What do you do?

A. You comment on the post to start a discussion with your friend about why he or she posted it. (yellow)	B. You report the mean comment to an adult and/or the social media website. (green)
C. You keep scrolling. It is not your problem. (blue)	D. You join in by making a comment that shows you agree with your friend about the teacher. (orange)

Scenario 3:

A group of kids at school is going around pranking other kids and posting pictures to be funny. They want you to like all the photos so more people see them online.

A. You like the pictures because they are your friends. (yellow)	B. You tell other people to start liking the pictures too. (green)
C. You start posting pictures to be funny. (blue)	D. You ask your friends to take the pictures down because they could be hurting people's feelings. (orange)

Scenario 4:

Your two best friends have been group chatting without you the last few days. At school, you notice they have funny inside jokes and continue to communicate with each other on the chat while you are around. You are starting to feel left out and you don't know why you can't be a part of the group chat. What do you do?

A. Talk to both of your friends face to face about how you feel left out. (yellow)	B. Continue to ignore it. It will all blow over in a few days. (green)
C. Start a group chats with other friends to make them jealous. (blue)	D. Post on social media that your friends keep leaving you out. (orange)