

Privacy Policy — TikTok Live Sale Capture

Last updated: September 2026

What this extension does

TikTok Live Sale Capture runs only on TikTok Shop's own LIVE console pages (shop.tiktok.com/streamer/live/*). While active, it watches the page for "won" auction results and, for each one, captures a single still frame from the video feed already playing on that page, along with the item number, price, and buyer name as shown in that result.

What data is collected

- A screenshot (single video frame) at the moment each item sells
- The item number, sale price, and buyer name/username, exactly as displayed on the TikTok page at that moment
- A timestamp for each capture
- The listing name text you type or paste into the extension's own panel

Where this data is stored

Everything is stored locally in your own browser only, using Chrome's built-in chrome.storage.local. Nothing is sent to any external server, and the extension has no backend of its own. No data leaves your computer unless you explicitly choose to export it.

How to export or delete your data

- Export: clicking "Export ZIP" in the extension's panel packages your captured photos and their details into a .zip file, downloaded directly to your own computer via your browser's normal download mechanism.
- Delete: clicking "Clear session" permanently removes all captured data for the current session from local storage. Uninstalling the extension removes all of its stored data as well.

Third parties

This extension does not use analytics, advertising, or tracking of any kind, and does not share data with any third party. It is a local capture tool for the account holder's own record-keeping.

Permissions used, and why

- activeTab / host permission for shop.tiktok.com: needed to read the page's content (to detect "won" results) and capture a frame from its video feed.
- storage: needed to save captures locally between page loads, so a browser refresh mid-stream doesn't lose already-captured photos.
- downloads: needed to save the exported .zip file to your computer.
