Collaboration Plan for E-Portfolio

With WHOM will you share your E-Portfolio?	My E-Portfolio will be shared with parents, teachers, administrators, possibly students, and any other person who has access to my classroom website, as it is open to the public.
WHAT will you share from your E-Portfolio? Consider the role of each stakeholder.	Every part of my E-Portfolio will be shared with stakeholders. Each section in the E-Portfolio could potentially benefit a parent of a child with disabilities, or any parent at all, by helping their child better access curriculum. The sections on Reading, Writing, Low Incidence Tools, and the IEP process could help a parent to know what is available for his/her daughter, and what his/her child's rights are. Many times ignorance prevents children from getting access to the tools they need. Teachers could benefit especially from the section on the SAMR model and Bloom's Digital Taxonomy, as many of my colleagues probably went through teacher credentialing programs before the revision of Bloom's Taxonomy. These learning theories are key to ensuring that our students are accessing higher order thinking skills, and that we are using technology in a meaningful way.
HOW will you share it? (consider available technology for parents/families and students, especially those of diverse cultures, languages, and socioeconomic backgrounds)	My E-Portfolio has its own separate tab on my Wix classroom website. To share my website with teachers, I will send a link using our district email, along with a description of what is included in my E-Portfolio.
WHEN will you share it?	On back-to-school night, I will have Chromebooks set up at each of the student's desks, and parents will get to peruse my class website as I go through the different components of it. This will help ensure that some parents who do not own computers can have an opportunity to see the information. During back-to-school night, I will encourage parents to click on my E-Portfolio tab and to explore the different resources that are available to them. I will print out a paper copy of the web address and a directory explaining what information is in each section that parents can take home with them. This directory will be available in Spanish and Vietnamese also.

HOW FREQUENTLY will you share information from your E-Portfolio?	My E-Portfolio will be shared at least twice a school year. I will share it once during back-to-school night, and once during our AB Day. I plan on talking to my administrator and our district's tech support about sharing it on our next EdTech Conference, as part of a workshop about building a classroom website using Wix.
